There are too many goods for us to talk about all of them—they'll do their own talking if you will drop in and give them a chance.

Miss Ana Dillon of Iowa came to Anadarko yesterday to make her future home with her mother, Mary J. Dillon. Last evening in company with, J. P. Haas and her mother she was out viewing the city when the dust storm struck them. When the dust arrived, absolute darkness came with it save for occasional flashes of lightning. Gropping their way homewards they fell into one of the extremely dangerous unbridged culverts left by our new street commissioner, and were badly bruised. It might have proved a serious accident. The commissioner is guilty of criminal negligence in leaving the streets in their present dangerous condition.

Washington, D. C., April 29.—General McArthur in testifying before the Senate committee on the Philippines defended the methods used by General Funston in the capture of Aguinaldo. Senator Patterson sought to show that it was not difficult to deceive Aguinaldo by forgery, and referred to his capture by General Funston through a forged letter signed "Lacuna." McArthur with considerable emphasis, declared that Funston was not responsible in any way for any methods which obtained in the capture of Aguinaldo. "I am responsible in that matter in every way and particular," said McArthur. "It was one of the deceptions practiced in war and whatever deception attaches thereto I take."

General McArthur disclaimed any responsibility for the order of General Jacob H. Smith to make Samar a howling wilderness.
